Weekly Words from The Rock

My mother raved over this Question and Answer from Msgr. Charles Pope and while his stance isn't popular, it stands on firm Catholic teaching.

Question: My daughter scorns the Church's view on contraception and blames the Catholic Church for the spread of AIDS in Africa. Are there ways I can answer her rebukes?

Answer: From ancient Jewish times and through two Christian millennia until the early 1990s, contraception was denounced by all Christian and Jewish denominations as contrary to God's Law. In 1930, the Anglicans were the first to give qualified approval for contraception, and slowly other denominations fell in line.

By the late 1960s there were demands that the Catholic Church also would fall in line and give approval for contraceptive usage. Protestants claimed it would reduce abortions to nearly zero, because every child would be a "wanted child." Further, divorce would drop, because couples could have more sex without worries of pregnancy, and this would make couples happier. In addition, the dignity of women would be enhanced, because they no longer would be "slaves" to their bodies.

In 1968, Pope Paul VI declined to change the Church's teaching despite widespread expectations that he would. He predicted the opposite results. Instead, he predicted that abortions would increase (as would divorce) and that the dignity of women would diminish, because they would be seen as sexual objects, not as wives and mothers.

Paul VI was right. Widespread use of contraception ushered in promiscuity and the lie of "sex without consequences." Since contraception's widespread use began, abortion has skyrocketed, as has divorce. Other consequences included an increase in sexually transmitted diseases (such as AIDS), teenage pregnancy and single motherhood, absent and irresponsible fathers, the breakdown of the families, and the poverty and dysfunction that goes with all of this. There is also pornification of our culture that assists in spreading sexual confusion to include the celebration of homosexual acts and so-called transgenderism.

When sex no longer is about having children and thus belongs in stable, traditional marriage, sex becomes only about self-satisfaction, and people engage in harmful, unhealthy and self-destructive practices that manifest deep confusion about the fundamental purpose of sexual union. It is children who ultimately must pay the price. Either they are aborted or they survive but must often live in a confusing world of absent fathers and broken families. This is far from the stable family they deserve with a father and mother. Simply put, we have made a huge mess of things.

Much of the dysfunction can be tied to promiscuity that contraception has helped to promote. Through contraception we have separated what God has joined (sex, marriage and having children) and we are reaping the whirlwind.

As for AIDS in Africa, the Church is not spreading AIDS; those who break God's commandments regarding chastity are spreading it. The only "safe sex" is within a monogamous, faithful marriage.

The Church is right to promote the best way to avoid AIDS. Condoms are not even close to 100% effective. And all the while those same condoms increase the very behavior that leads to AIDS, since the lie of sex without consequences is further spread. Truth be told, if we all followed God's law, which the Church teaches, AIDS and most sexually transmitted diseases would nearly vanish. Promiscuity is the problem, not the Church.

Music & Choral Director &
Coordinator of Liturgy

Pope Francis recently published an Apostolic Exhortation to Young People called "Christus Vivit – Christ Lives." This was a direct result of the 2018 Synod on Young People, the Faith, and Vocational Discernment.

From the publisher: "The pope proposes that youth engage the joy of a living God, the richness of their Catholic faith, and the strength of living in Christian community. He illuminates the Scriptures to give youth tangible hope and draw them more fully into the Church. And in a time of new technology and transformative social changes, the pope challenges youth to take the grounded path of generous sacrifice and faithful companionship with peers, family, neighbors, and elders...Christus Vivit is vital for youth and young adults, as they live out their vocation in the Church and their mission in the world. The exhortation is also an important read for pastors, parents, educators, families, youth and young adult ministries, and all Christian young people."

As a Millennial, I can tell you that my peers need this right now. What especially caught my eye was the line about the strength of living in Christian community. During my two years with the House of Brigid in Ireland, I lived in a lay community of young post-grads such as myself. Indeed, communities are not just for the priestly or religious! I grew as a person of faith by living, working, and praying with them.

I would strongly consider picking up a copy of this to read yourself or share with a young person!
